Family Support Program Client Data Collection – Information Sheet for Clients

What is client data?

Client data refers to information that is collected by Family Support Program (FSP) service providers about the clients accessing their services. This information is a combination of client details such as age, gender and Indigenous status, as well as the type of service provided to each client.

This information is entered into the FSP Data System which is a secure, online database used by all FSP service providers and for which the Department of Social Services is responsible.

How is client data used?

Information stored in the FSP Data System is used by Department of Social Services (DSS) and/or Attorney-General's Department (AGD) to assess the FSP's effectiveness in providing support to families and children in Australia.

It does this by providing valuable information on the following:

- The numbers of individuals, families and children using FSP services.
- The reasons which lead people to access FSP services.
- The demographics of people accessing FSP services, such as age and gender.
- The types of services provided that respond to the needs of individuals and families.
- The client outcomes achieved as a result of participating in FSP services.

Privacy:

All data entered into the FSP Data System is used for reporting on the effectiveness of the FSP in providing support. Once entered, a unique code is generated to de-identify your information when displayed to DSS and/or AGD. Individuals and families will not be identified in any report or publication. While client names are collected by service providers for their own record keeping purposes, no names are used in any reports or publications.

DSS, AGD and all FSP service providers are bound to protect the privacy of individuals under the Privacy Act 1988 (Commonwealth). This information will not be provided to a third party (outside DSS and AGD) unless required or authorized by law, for example, to protect someone from harm.

Consent:

No information on a client will be recorded in the FSP Data System without first gaining the client's consent. Client consent is completely voluntary and can be withdrawn at any time. Withdrawal of consent means that no future information will be recorded in the FSP Data System after the client's consent has been withdrawn.

Privacy complaints and access and correction of personal information:

Clients should contact their FSP service provider for information on how they can access their personal information and, where necessary, seek correction of that information. Clients can also contact their FSP service provider for information about how they can complain about a breach of their privacy.

Once your information is entered in the FSP Data System, your first and last name will be replaced with a unique code that will de-identify your information, when displayed to DSS and/or AGD.
